Cancel selection barcode: By Keith Evans Point-of-sale systems, and some private computer systems used heavily for online shopping, rely on bar codes to quickly, easily and accurately identify product information. Most bar code scanners come with universal serial bus (USB) interfaces for easy connection to the computer, though some older models may still require a serial port for connection. This article will review the steps of connecting both USB and serial bar code scanners. Locate the USB connector on the bar code scanner. Bar code scanners, like other computer peripherals, connect to the computer by way of a data cable. At the end of the data cable, most likely opposite the scanner itself, should be a small rectangle-shaped plastic and metal connector. This connector is the USB terminal that will plug in to the computer's USB port. Locate the USB port on the computer. The USB port, whether on the computer or a peripheral device, will be rectangular in shape and feature either the letters "U S B" or a small network diagram showing two circles, a square, and an arrow. Connect the USB cable to the computer or peripheral device. Once the USB connector and port have been identified, push the USB connector firmly but gently into the available USB port. USB connectors are keyed so that they can only be inserted the correct way; if you feel solid resistance while inserting the USB connector, remove the connector from the port, turn it over and plug it in. Install bar-code reading software. While the bar code scanner can scan the bar code into the machine, software must decipher the meaning of the code. Bar code scanners, if purchased new, should include a version of proprietary bar code software compatible with your scanner. If your scanner did not come with software, or if it is missing the installation disc, bar code software may be purchased on the Internet from sites like WaspBarcode.com. Locate the serial connector on the bar code scanner. Bar code scanners, like other peripherals, connect to the computer by way of a data cable. At the end of the serial cable should be a rectangular, typically male connector. The cable may be pinned with nine, sixteen, or more pins depending on the design of the scanner. Locate the serial port on the computer. Most computers have at least one serial port, usually found on the back of the machine. The port will be female, maybe blue in color, rectangular in shape, and should be approximately the same size (or slightly smaller) as the serial connector. Connect the serial cable to the computer or connected peripheral. When both the connector and port have been identified, push the serial connector firmly but gently into the port. Like USB connectors, serial connectors are keyed so that they can only be inserted the correct way; if you feel solid resistance while inserting the connector, remove the connector from the port, turn it over and plug it in. Do not use excessive force while pushing on the serial connector, as it is possible to bend the connecting pins and damage the connector. Install bar-code reading software. While the bar code scanner can scan the bar code into the machine, software must interpret the meaning of the code. Bar code scanners, if purchased new, should include a version of proprietary bar code software compatible with your specific scanner. If your scanner did not come with software, or if it is missing the installation disc, bar code software may be purchased on the Internet from sites like WaspBarcode.com. The number of scans of QR codes has doubled According to a study "Mobile Bar code Trend Report," by US scanner app producer Scanbuy, the use of mobile phones to scan QR and barcodes saw more than a 200 percent year-over-year increase in traffic.Scanbuy's ScanLife iPhone application processed traffic from more than 5 million users in the first quarter of 2012 and total scans for the company reached 13 million, representing a 157 percent year-over-year growth.The majority of the scans are of newer QR codes, seventy-six percent of traffic for the company came from 2D bar codes, with just twenty-four percent of traffic coming from 1D bar codes such as UPC codes.Interestingly, males made up 68 percent of total scans. Although scanning a mobile bar code is more associated with males, scans from females have increased by eight percent over the past year.More men scanning than womenThe 25-to-34-year-old group made up 35 percent of users on Scanbuy's platform, marking a new high for the age bracket. Although marketers are using mobile bar codes to reach a variety of demographics, it is clear that a majority of scanning is done by younger, tech-savvy consumers, per the study.Barcode scans by age Scanbuy Q1 2012 Twenty percent of scans came from consumers ages 35-44, 16 percent came from 18- to 24-year-old consumers and 8 percent came from users 18 years old or younger. Scans from consumers aged 45 years or older rounded out the findings with 21 percent.
